CHATURDASH DEVATA TEMPLE

Old Agartala, where the Temple of the Fourteen Gods is located, is 6 km away from the present Capital City of Agartala. Before 1770 A.D, the idols of Fourteen Gods were in Udaipur were in two Temples beside Tripureswar Bhairab Temple. In 1770 A.D, Maharaja Krishna Kishore Manikya, after being defeated by Shamsher Gaze, shifted his capital from Udaipur to Old Agartala and the idols of theFourteen Gods were also taken to the capital and installed in a new Temple. Capital was shifted to Agartala in 1840 A.D., but the idols of the Fourteen Gods remained in the same Temple at Agartala.

On the occasion of the special puja of the Fourteen Gods known as 'Kharchi Puja', a grand mela or fair is held for 7 days in and around the Old palace. It is a popular religious shrine where thousands of devotees across the country assemble to celebrate Kharchi Festival with great pomp.

The worship of the Fourteen Gods has an old history and legend associated with it. During the time of Mahabharata, Trilochana, a contemporary of Yudhisthira, was the king of Tripura who used to worship these Fourteen Gods as Royal deities. The tradition continued with all the subsequent Kings of Tripura. Kharchi Puja observed during the month of Ashad (June-July) is very famous in Tripura.

Animal sacrifices offered by the devotees are an integral feature of Kharchi puja. Inside the temple the idols of the Fourteen Gods do not consist of full body – only the heads of the Gods are there.
